US EPA ARCHIVE DOCUMENT

By Joshua Yi
June, 2010

Title The ocean has five senses

The ocean has five senses as we do!
Lighthouses are the ocean's eyes. They see seagulls flying, boats sailing, jellyfish drifting, and people swimming.
Bubbles are the ocean's nose. They smell fish, sea cucumbers, and corals.
Seashells are the ocean's ears. They hear whales splashing, crabs digging, and children laughing.
Waves are the ocean's hands. They pat the ocean's islands, touch and support the ships, and gently rock swimming children.
The ocean has a big mouth. Can you guess what it is? It's the ocean itself!!! It is full of yummy food — mussels, clams, shrimps, seaweed and much more.
Whales are the ocean's brain. Whales live from the Arctic to the Antarctic. They dive in the deep water and splash water on the ocean's surface. They know every secret and gift of the ocean.
They wish the ocean is CLEAN, HEALTHY, and PEACEFUL

US EPA ARCHIVE DOCUMENT